coverstory 'The Hair Tales' connect coiffures and culture

Following her award-honored run in "black-ish," Tracee Ellis Ross is getting to the roots of another matter.

The actress turns interviewer as the host and an executive producer of "The Hair Tales," a series from the relatively new Onyx Collective initiative that makes its debut Saturday, Oct. 22, on both Hulu and OWN. An executive producer of the show with others including Oprah Winfrey and author Michaela angela Davis, Ross talks with such notables as Winfrey, Issa Rae and Congresswoman Ayanna Pressley (D-Mass.) and Ross' fellow "blackish" alum Marsai Martin about their hair experiences and how those have impacted their connections to Black culture and society. (Pressley lost her hair to the condition alopecia

"I feel like I, like so many others, can chronicle my journey of selfacceptance through my journey with my hair," Ross explains. "I don't think it was until I was a teenager that I started to face my own personal journey with my experience with my hair, not seeing myself mirrored back to me through culture, through media, through newscasters ... anyone. I saw it at home (with Ross' mother, iconic singer-actress Diana Ross), but I didn't see it out in the world.

"At the time, I took that personally, and really sort of put on my own self that I wasn't enough. I wasn't correct. As I've gotten older, my own sort of realization about myself was that I was one of many. I was part of a vast community, a culture of people who also weren't seeing themselves, and it played into the larger story historically, about how black people have been seen in this country, and how the culture of beauty and the industry of beauty has not necessarily mirrored back the reality of the power and the beauty of who we are."

Fellow "The Hair Tales" executive producer Davis says, "Often, Black women's hair and Black women's existence is positioned like a challenge or a problem that we have to solve. We're talking about it in the layered way in which we live, so there's joy, there's resilience, there's history, there's memory, there's hysteria, there's ancestry. We're getting at all of it, and that's the beauty of it. When we get to tell our own stories, we get to tell them inside the complexity in which we actually live."

Indeed, Ross emphasizes, "We are using, in this show, hair as an entrance – as an on-ramp into our souls, to explore the largeness of our humanity. I hope that 'The Hair Tales' really offers a new definition that beauty is a reflection of self, the imprint of the soul, instead of an idea that is concocted from history and systemic limitations."

'Snack on This!' shows how treats are made on Cooking Channel

As a nation, America aspires to eat healthy but let's face it — we love our snacks. And an upcoming series may tell us a little more than what we want to know about them in a week of worthy offerings on Cooking Channel and Food Network.

On "Snack on This!," premiering Wednesday, Oct. 19, on Cooking Channel, host Kalen Allen ("Cakealikes") takes viewers inside factories far and wide to show how favorite treats are made. From Buffalo Wild Wings and Ramen Noodles to Coca-Cola and Jelly Bellies, Allen goes behind the scenes to reveal origin stories, amazing feats of manufacturing and the steps involved in bringing these comestibles to store shelves. Consider this a how-the-sausage-is-made story but without politicians or pork.

Also that night on Cooking is a new episode of "Food Paradise" which focuses is on the gastronomical delights that can be had at drive-in eateries. There's nothing dietetic going on here as folks pull up to sample some hot barbecue in Ohio and overstuffed pastrami sandwiches at a Los Angeles diner that celebrates classic car culture. Get your motor running.

Switching gears to Food Network, there are some iconic dishes from different decades being made in "The Kitchen" on Saturday, Oct. 22, starting in the '60s with a tiki-style pu pu platter courtesy of Alex Guarnaschelli and Katie Lee Biegel. There are also Sunny Anderson's '70-style beef stroganoff, Geoffrey Zakarian's 1980s crab and avocado salad and Jeff Mauro's nod to the '90s with a chocolate lava cake – all washed down with a timeless cocktail, the martini.

Something is also going on in Ina Garten's kitchen in the Sunday, Oct. 16, edition of "Be My Guest With Ina Garten," as she welcomes in actor Nathan Lane to sample her version of his favorite dessert, a rum raisin rice pudding. She also shows him how to make mussels with saffron cream before they head out to pick herbs in her garden and into town for yet more sweet treats in East Hampton, N.Y.

Speaking of sweet, Molly Yeh's got some tasty items in the oven in Sunday's "Girl Meets Farm," as she's celebrating her tutu-loving daughter Berenie's birthday by baking a tie-dye tutu birthday cake and loading up a table full of snacks including swirly yogurt queso with cilantro cream, little bean burritos and tiny taco salads. Some kids have all the luck.

Jack Reynor, Gary Carr, JJ Feild and T'Nia Miller also star. (ORIGINAL)
